Who is TAM?

You may recognize TAM from the cover of Nirvana's 1993 album, "In Utero." TAM, the Transparent Anatomical Manikin is a life-sized, three-dimensional, transparent model of a human being created for medical instructional purposes.

TAM was created by designer Richard Rush in 1968. It consists of a see-through reproduction of a female human body, with various organs being wired so specific body systems can light up on command, on cue with a pre-recorded educational presentation.

Only 42 TAMs were produced, and McMillen Health is the only remaining health education facility fortunate to have and still use a TAM for education.

Join us for the first annual "Tee Off with TAM" golf outing!
